“A recommendable book”

It is my duty as the President of a Scientific Society, besides what is established in the Statutes, to take the opportunity to alert the Society’s Members to occurrences of great scientific relevance.

Considering that the methodical consult of electronic information is now recommended in the wide field of Science, the underlying methodology may not always be the best.

The book that I hereby recommend, in its various chapters, is based on the current scientific evidence, and we know that that is not easy to construct and is difficult to be replaced.

Prof. José Ferro, President of our Scientific Committee, has accustomed us to this type of work presentation.

I believe that now I may congratulate him again (I have already congratulated him in the proper occasion) but this time accompanied by most health-care professionals and, in particular, by those especially dedicated to cerebrovascular disease, of which stroke is a part, within the Practice and Basic Sciences domain.

Therefore, while wishing you good holidays, I recommend you this:

If you can, take this book with you and read it in between moments of good and deserved rest.
